So Others Might Eat Receives 2007 National Business Ethics Award for Outstanding Ethical Practice

Washington, DC – January 29, 2008. SOME (So Others Might Eat) has the distinct honor of being the first nonprofit ever selected to receive the coveted National Capital Business Ethics Award by the Society of Financial Service Professionals (FSP) in recognition of its exceptional stewardship and ethical practices.

As a member of the Board of Directors, I am pleased to be a part of the governance process for SOME. Clearly SOME has set forth the highest standards for helping underserved populations regain their dignity, independence and self worth.

*George McFarland, President and CEO
McFarland & Associates Inc.*

Each day, SOME is restoring hope and dignity one person at a time. An interfaith, community-based organization, SOME exists to help the poor and homeless by addressing their immediate daily needs. The organization provides food, clothing, health care and other services such as affordable housing, job training, addiction treatment, and counseling, to the poor, the elderly and individuals with mental illness.

As a trusted agent for change in the nation's capitol, SOME has broken the cycle of homelessness and hunger for thousands of homeless adults and children. Through partnerships and expanding comprehensive continuum of services, those in need have realized their full human potential. SOME's vision for the future: Everyone who wants a job has one; everyone has affordable housing, medical care and food. Everyone who wants addiction and mental health treatment receives it; everyone who needs literacy learns to read and to write.
